Note:

A variant title of this plate is Evening (Melancholy; On the beach) (Schiefler, 1907).

There are four states of this print. The polychrome impressions of the third and fourth state were printed from two woodblocks. This is an impression of the third state, printed in black and ochre.

According to the extant sale ledgers, Hildebrand Gurlitt acquired a collection of 365 graphics by Edvard Munch from "Frau Dr. Rauert" (Mrs. Martha Rauert, 1869–1958) on 31 August 1938. The entry refers Dr. Paul Rauert (1863–1938), an advocate and art collector from the city of Hamburg. The Rauerts were avid supporters of the expressionist works of "Die Brücke"; Martha Rauert became a passive member of the artists group in 1908. The couple owned a large art collection, containing works by Emil Nolde, Karl Schmidt-Rottluff, Beckmann, Paula Modersohn-Becker, Ernst Barlach, Rolf Nesch and Edvard Munch. After the death of her husband in 1938, Martha Rauert succeeded to preserve the collection over the time of the Nazi Regime and the Second World War but occasionally sold items from the collection. She was not persecuted under the National Socialist Regime.

Shortly after the acquisition, Gurlitt apparently sold the graphics via H. Johanessen to the Norske Kredit Bank in Oslo on 11 September 1938. Corresponding entries in the sale ledgers do not mention the specific number of works, that were transferred to Norway. It is certainly possible that some of the graphics by Munch remained with Gurlitt. However, as the sale ledgers do not provide detailed information on single items, it was not possible to identify this particular print amongst the works acquired from Martha Rauert.
